Kate Middleton, Madonna and six degrees of fashion separation

It seems that one of our favourite tall women, Kate Middleton, has been lucky enough to receive a real compliment from the queen – of pop, that is. Yes, Madonna recently told People magazine that she thinks the Duchess of Cambridge is “elegant with a great sense of style.” Not bad! Madonna – who is also reportedly a huge fan of Kate’s fairytale Alexander McQueen wedding dress, which wowed the nation earlier in the year – is set to launch her Truth or Dare fashion range in 2012, following the success of her Material Girl fashion range for teenagers. The Truth or Dare collection will initially include footwear, accessories and fragrances, although we suspect it won’t be long before Madge branches into clothing. Madonna’s foray into fashion is just the latest in a string of celebrity ventures – it was also recently announced that Rihanna has designed a capsule collection for Emporio Armani and that the nation’s sweetheart, Cheryl Cole, has designed a range of heels for Stylistpick. According to a spokesman for the brand, Cheryl was involved “at all stages in the process, from details like toe shapes and embellishments, to the packaging itself, Cheryl even created names for each style and colourway.” Interestingly enough, Cheryl has dubbed a pair of studded stilettos from her collection “Her Royal Hotness”, apparently in homage to Pippa Middleton. She has also named a pair of leopard-print trimmed boots “Ri Ri” after her “girl crush” Rihanna – we think this proves our “six degrees of celeb fashion separation” theory nicely! With so many tall women leading the fashion fore, we can’t wait to see what spring 2012 has in store for tall women’s clothing. According to Elle magazine, we should all be looking out for pastel colours, 1920s-style drop waist dresses and bold prints in the form of birds and abstract art. For more style inspiration for tall women’s clothing, take a look at our “new arrivals” section – it’s full of must-have pieces for 2012.
