The cuts

Posted by AnnieM on May 25, 2010

Whitehall yesterday announced the first phase of the dreaded cuts ahead of the Emergency Budget next month. The total cuts to be implemented amount to £6.2billion, which despite the substantial sum merely dents the total deficit which stands to date at £156billion. Depressing, huh? So for your viewing pleasure (displeasure is probably closer to the mark) here follows the Jobsgopublic at-a-glance summary of the announced cuts:

The cuts

- Child Trust Funds are to be scrapped as early as January 2011. The scheme which pays parents £250 at a child's birth also pays an additional sum when the child reaches seven years old. The scheme was set up by the previous government to encourage parents to invest for their children, who have access to their money from the age of 18. Payments to existing Child Trust Funds will be reduced from August before being abolished by the following year.
- Recruitment in the civil service will be frozen.
- University places will cut from 20,000 to 10,000
- The British Educational Communications and Technology Agency (BECTA) Quango will be closed.
- Local government grants will be significantly reduced (an estimated £1.2billion reduction). Local authorities will be expected to make cuts at their own discretion.
- Department of Transport spending will be cut by £683m
- Work and Pensions will have £535m of cuts
- Future Jobs Funds are to be wound down and then abolished all together within the next twelve months. The funds guaranteed 18-24 year olds who had been unemployed for more than six months either paid work, apprenticeships or training.
- £1000 incentive for employers to offer employment to candidates who have been out of work for six months or more will be stopped.
- Department of Business, Innovation and Skills will see £836m of cuts, the biggest cuts to date.
- IT Projects within the sector costing over £1m will be frozen or delayed.
- Government advertising and marketing campaigns will be frozen unless absolutely essential.*

*All these cuts will be overseen by the newly created Efficiency and Reform Group Protected....

- Frontline NHS services
- Sure Start programme for the under 5s which aims to give every child the best possible chance in life through a holistic approach of improved childcare, health, early education and family support.

- Education spending for 16-19 year olds.

Prime Minister vacancy – the aftermath

Posted by AnnieM on May 21, 2010

We had an overwhelming response to our Prime Minister vacancy. Over 250 of you applied for the role, with over 32,000 views to the job advert. Some applicants cited heads of state for their references and one candidate said they'd 'love the opportunity to shroud the UK in a fireball of endless suffocation of bureaucracy'. Another believed they met the 'easy to impersonate' criteria because they were often 'mimicked by younger brother during personal attacks'. One candidate even cited undergoing 'day surgery to remove an olive tree from nasal cavity' as a reason for their one day sickness absence.

Within days of the vacancy going live, the national press took up the story as news of the vacancy rode the internet waves with gusto. Even the Russian media picked up on the story when a Russian radio station ran a live feature about our exclusive vacancy.

Those of you who submitted complete application forms should have received a 'closing' email, thanking you for your interest in the role and explaining that the role was in fact offered to two candidates – Cameron and Clegg – due to the demanding nature of the position.

It's a shame we weren't able to offer some of you the job instead – we clearly have a very talented candidate base with excellent business and social contacts and we at Jobsgopublic reckon some of you could do a much better job than any politician, any day!

Until next time,

The Jobsgopublic team.

That's why all our news feeds are now focusing on developments that you, the job seeker, should know about. We've already built up a large bank of bite-size articles ranging from CV hints, to on-the-job-training issues to employment trends and inspirational stories. It's all there for the browsing.

Watch out for more imminent developments coming to the Jobsgopublic website soon.

As always, we'd love to know your thoughts, ideas or suggestions for the website. Drop us a line in reply to this blog, and we'll be sure to get back to you.

Election 2010: the aftermath

Posted by AnnieM on May 12, 2010

It's been a tense few weeks in the lead up to May 6th. For five days after the election, the nation waited with baited breath to hear about the outcome of talks between the Conservative leader, David Cameron and leader of the Liberal Democrats, Nick Clegg. Finally the wait was over and at 7.30pm yesterday, it was announced that the two parties would form a coalition. The news came just after a formal resignation tendered by Gordon Brown who announced he would step down as Prime Minister and leader of the Labour party. Until the Labour party elect a new leader, Harriet Harman will be acting Labour leader.

With so many unfamiliar phrases and buzz words (many of which haven't been used to describe contemporary politics for decades) its becoming harder to keep abreast of all the latest Whitehall developments. Considerate as ever, we at Jobsgopublic have compiled our own guide to post-election buzz words and phrases which will hopefully make it a bit easier to navigate your way around news sites focusing on the election and its aftermath.

Alliance

An agreement reached between two or more political parties in order to work towards a policy or goal. For instance, the Conservatives and Liberal Democrats could form an alliance over the issue of electoral reform.

Alternative Voting system (AV)

The most talked about option, this would be a produce some different results from our existing system but is not a form of proportional representation.

Voters select their preferred candidates in rank order. Our current system (see below) only allows us to cast one vote. If a candidate is selected as 'first choice' by over 50% of voters (in other words, a candidate receives the majority and therefore more than the other candidates in total) they are then elected. However, if no candidate receives an overall majority, the candidate with the most second choice preferences are counted. If there is no overall majority of second-choice candidates, then the third choice candidate is counted and so on.

Coalition

Two or more parties form a government together. The government would then be made up of a mixed cabinet from the two parties.

First Past the Post (FPTP)

This is our current voting system where we – the electorate – are allowed only one vote for our preferred candidate (MP). The party with the most MPs elected then forms the next government.

Hung parliament

When no party has received more seats than the other parties collectively it is known as a hung parliament. In other words, no party has received an overall majority.

Proportional Representation (PR)

Parliamentary seats are allocated in proportion to the amount of votes cast. Our FPTP system is not proportionally represented, for example. In this election, Liberal Democrats gained 57 seats (57 MPs were elected), received 23% of the vote but in terms of parliamentary seats only gained 9% of the available seats. There are several types of proportional representation.

Rainbow coalition

A coalition of multiple parties creating a 'rainbow' effect from the colour associated with each party.

Referendum

A direct vote for the electorate on a particular issue.

Single transferrable vote

For this system to work, parliamentary constituencies (or areas) would be altered to return multiple candidates rather than just one. It is similar to the alternative system, in that voters rank candidates in order of preference.

A quota is set by a formula. Any candidate who reaches or exceeds the quota is declared elected. If a candidate has more votes than the quota, that candidate's surplus votes are transferred to other candidates.

Votes that would have gone to the winner instead go to the next preference listed on their ballot. If no one new meets the quota, the candidate with the fewest votes is eliminated and that candidate's votes are transferred. This process repeats until either a winner is found for every seat or there are as many seats as remaining candidates.
